

Center for Clinical and Translational Science Community Engagement Program

Purpose

The mission of the Community Engagement Program at CCTS is to improve the health of communities through research/outreach collaborations with community members and agencies, especially in areas where health disparities are pronounced. We are liaisons between researchers and the community offering consultations on effective community-engaged research strategies and providing support for partnership-based research projects. The CCTS is an NIH-funded collaboration among OSU, Nationwide Children's Hospital, the OSU Wexner Medical Center, and the Appalachian Translational Research Network.

How you can get involved:

- Let us know about the public health concerns in your community, as well as research you would like to see done at OSU or NCH
- Let us know communities/agencies with whom you want to partner
- Refer or recommend community members who would like to become involved in collaborative research and consultations
- Refer faculty members/researchers who want help starting community-engaged research projects

Impact

We have over 40 community partners from 18 counties in Central and Southeastern Ohio, including churches, schools, nursing homes, philanthropy groups, OSU extension offices, county health departments, and civic groups.

We provide collaborative opportunities, outreach, and consultation support to investigators from The Ohio State University, the OSU Wexner Medical Center, Nationwide Children's Hospital, and our community partners.

Providing consultations from three Community Engagement Advisory Boards of 66 faculty and community stakeholders; research ethics, focus groups, and community-based participatory research workshop; and co-sponsorship of community conferences.
